Annual Statements Distributed

The Department of Retirement Systems (DRS) distributed members' 2004 annual statements to employers in March. The statements provide members with information pertaining to the defined benefit component of Plan 3. The statements also provide Plan 3 members with an update on service credit earned in 2004, as well as their total service credit.

Statements were distributed for members of the Public Employees' Retirement System. Members employed by public school districts, educational service districts and higher education institutions will receive their statements in November.

If you have questions or did not receive a statement, please contact your payroll office.

Access Your Account Online

Recently, DRS launched a new service – Defined Benefit Account Access – that provides online access to your defined benefit account information. You can view your current defined benefit, service credit details, employment history, beneficiary, annual statement and other information. If you are retired or are receiving payment as a survivor of a deceased member, you can view your monthly payment information, annual 1099-R tax statements and post-retirement employment information, if applicable. To register, go to www.drs.wa.gov and select the Online Account Access link.

Market Commentary

The events that dominated the headlines in 2004 faded from focus late in the year and early into 2005. The employment picture showed signs of strength with both wage and job growth picking up. Investor confidence improved as economic reports in January generally confirmed a bright outlook for American corporations.

Companies benefited from increased demand and were well positioned to meet the needs from the supply side. The Federal Reserve is keeping a close eye on inflation, which rose slightly during the three-month period. The Federal Reserve continued its measured pace of quarter point increases, leaving short-term interest rates at 2.5 percent. The U.S. still faces a number of challenges on the horizon. Exports were curtailed by a significant reduction in foreign demand, while imports, particularly oil, increased.

Bonds

Bond markets continued to struggle. Short-term yields rose while yields on longer-term bonds declined. The bond market appeared to be improving in December and January, but its slip in February diminished a portion of the gains. The Lehman Brothers Aggregate Bond Index finished with a 0.9 percent return for the period. Low quality, high yield bonds performed strongly relative to higher quality bonds, bolstering investor confidence that the yield advantage will continue.

Stocks

The stock market reversed course early in the year with the Energy sector once again dominating due to near record-high oil prices. After gaining momentum late in 2004, Consumer Discretionary, Technology, and Telecommunication stocks once again found themselves struggling. Despite the weakness early in the year, strong gains in December and February kept the S&P 500 Index's return positive with a three-month gain of 2.5 percent. While the market remained mixed overall, large company stocks have outperformed small company stocks for three consecutive months. Small companies, as measured by the Russell 2000 Index, rose only 0.3 percent during the three-month period versus the 3.3 percent advance by the Russell 1000 Index.

International stocks continued to outperform U.S. stocks as the MSCI ACWI ex U.S. gained 7.5 percent. Currency was again the main driver; U.S. investors placing capital overseas benefited from the weakening U.S. dollar versus foreign currencies. The dollar showed signs of strength in January but continued its descent in February. Overseas investors feared the impact of rising interest rates, high energy prices, and weak growth prospects in Germany and Japan, causing stock prices of companies based in these countries to suffer as a result. Emerging markets continued to shine during this period; 24 of the 27 countries that make up the MSCI Emerging Markets Index produced positive returns, leading to an exceptional 13.9 percent gain for the Index.
